

NORTH DAKOTA STATE UNIVERSITY

Well done, Ross!

North Dakota State University colleagues proudly congratulate Dr. Ross Collins, professor of communication, on his presentation of “Visions of Gold, Viewed from Abroad: International Journalism and the California Gold Rush” at the American Journalism Historians Association convention. Collins is dedicated to the success of his students, as demonstrated by this paper, which he co-wrote with NDSU students Andrew Pritchard, Amorette Hinderaker, Kay Beckermann and Sarah Adams.

A prominent contributor to journalism history, Collins is a recognized authority on World War I and the press, French journalism history and American journalism in the Old West frontier. He is the former treasurer of the American Journalism Historians Association and has more than 800 published stories and photographs in a wide variety of publications.

NDSU’s Department of Communication invites you to consider an advanced degree in a focused environment of research and achievement. Find out how you can study under the guidance of Collins and other distinguished faculty by visiting www.ndsu.edu/communication or www.ndsu.edu/gradschool.

NDSU

COMMUNICATION