

Graduate Student Panel: How to Get Your Research to Work for You

Moderator: Cory Macneil, University of Missouri

Panelists: Claire Rounkles, University of Missouri; Jason Guthrie, Clayton State University;

Dana Dabek, Temple University

This graduate student panel will focus on the multiple ways in which early career and practiced scholars can develop sustainable practices to create and advance their research agendas. Panelists will share their personal experiences and offer insight, tips, and suggestions on what developing scholars can do. This panel also invites panel attendees to participate in this discussion to share ideas on how scholars can get their research to work for them. Topics include how developing scholars can implement social media and networking to advance scholarship pursuits; different ways scholars can develop a sustainable research agenda; the many economic, political, and social forces that impact how public historians tell stories; and how to navigate balancing interpretations and collective memory of the past with centering voices that have previously been devalued.