

Teaching history that matters, outside of the box

Moderator: Jason Guthrie, Clayton University

Panelists: Janice Hume, University of Georgia; Dianne Bragg, University of Alabama; Michael Fuhlhage, Wayne State University; Bailey Dick, Bowling Green State University

"Experiential" and "active" have become academic buzzwords, and media history professors must think outside the box when developing courses. These panelists will share unique projects that bring journalism history to life for students in and out of the classroom. Panel attendees will be invited to do the same in the Q&A. Topics to be discussed include using "reacting games" as teaching tools in media history; using social media at research products; and in-depth analysis using primary sources.
